New Art installed at Pocket Park

Regional Program continues to bring Public Art to Raytown

(Raytown, Mo.) – Raytown residents and visitors passing the intersection of 63rd Street and Raytown Road can now enjoy the City’s newest public art piece which was installed Monday in the Pocket Park. The latest sculpture, as well as other ones are all part of the Sculpture on the Move program through the Creative Communities Alliance.

“CAMPANA,” by artist Joe Allred is a sound sculpture constructed of steel with a copper/bronze patina. Spanish for bell and a literal bell, “CAMPANA” will appeal to children and adults alike.

“CAMPANA” replaces “Moonscape,” the City’s first public sculpture that was installed in 2021. Sculptures are displayed for two-year terms. Raytown is one of 18 communities participating in this year’s Sculpture on the Move program.

Other public sculptures in Raytown that were acquired through the Sculpture on the Move program include:

- “Cohesive Narration” on display in front of City Hall until 2024, and
- “Muse-IC” on display at Colman Park until 2024.
